

Ann Mashburn's Stylish Boutique Debuts

By HASKELL HARRIS | JUNE 18, 2010 | DESIGN

If you're in Atlanta, Georgia, anytime this summer, make a point to stop by Ann Mashburn, the brand new self-titled shop opened by menswear designer Sid Mashburn's equally talented wife. It's just two doors down from his eponymous storefront.

Ann has been hard at work for months, but she shared a few early photos with me yesterday and her space is amazing. The whole thing is a feminine counterpoint to Sid's masculine aesthetic: where you'll find Lochcarron tartan upholstery at his shop, you'll find hot pink linen at hers, and so on. But the two brands also have quite a bit in common. Both of their showrooms carry a well edited selection of classic-meets-modern staples and designs from each of their in-house labels.

Stop by and check out the mix (think Kendall Conrad handbags, Ann's debut line of shirtdresses, and more).

How about opening up a Mashburn shop in Charleston you two?
